

Education with impact

How to re-invent learning to prepare students for an ever-changing future?

Universities face an evolving set of changes in societies and new needs and expectations from students. In this International Week we intend to stimulate debate on how to reinvent learning in order to equip students with the skills and knowledge essential to thrive in a constantly evolving world. Teachers must adapt and reinvent their teaching methods to ensure that students are prepared for this new landscape. This means adopting new technologies to create more engaging and personalized learning experiences, as well as nurturing students' skills such as critical thinking, problem-solving, and effective collaboration. By embracing new approaches and focusing on the evolving needs of students, higher education schools can surely continue to play a crucial role in contemporary societies. The big question, however, remains: how to do it?

Main Goals:

- Open the door of our University to the World
- Give International experience to students, teachers and staff;
- Disseminate mobility opportunities;
- Methodologies and knowledge exchange;
- Promote and Increase research;
- Networking;
